Camp fire with tri-poles, kettle-log near fire, R. - Curtain discovers Mr. and Mrs. Wilton and Cork. Wilton. Cork, look after the horses and cow, and I will help mother arrange the tent and look after the comforts of the camp. Where is Pat? Cork. He s gone to look after game for supper. Of course he ain t on hand if there s anything to do. But Ill attend to the domesticated quadrupedals, Massa Wilton. Scuse me. [Exit L. C. E.] Wilton. Well, mother, what do you say to locating here? This is about as pretty a stretch of land as any one may find anywhere. Mrs. Wilton. Oh, John, it makes little difference where we settle, so we settle down somewhere. You certainly cannot go much farther into the wilderness. I am tired of this continual moving, and just so we get under a roof once more, is all I care. Then, I know, I will feel less heathenish. Have you any idea...
